Allegro non troppo (♩ = 104)

15. p mf crese. f dimin.

The image shows a page of musical notation for a piano piece. It consists of five systems of staves. The first system is labeled '15.' and includes the tempo 'Allegro non troppo (♩ = 104)'. The dynamics 'p', 'mf', 'f', and 'dimin.' are indicated. The notation is partially obscured by black redaction marks.

Baltensperger + Siepert

Zurich based artists Stefan Baltensperger and David Siepert have been working collaboratively since 2007. With their artistic practice, Stefan and David critically reflect on social, cultural, and political issues. They immerse themselves into systems, aiming to make them visible and to manipulate them. Since 2010 the focus of their work lies within the political and the understanding of postcolonial structures.

Stefan Baltensperger (*1976) grew up in Zurich, Switzerland. David Siepert (*1983) grew up in the Black Forrest in Germany and later moved to Switzerland. Both Baltensperger and Siepert attended the Basel School of Fine Arts, and hold a master degree from Zurich University of the Arts. They began collaborating while still being undergraduate students and work from their Zurich studio ever since.

Ho aquí, con sus bandos relativos, algunos cuadros significativos del Museo de Arte Moderno de Nueva York. La figura de mujer desnuda en primer plano, respecto a la realidad, la realidad misma del hombre.

El hombre y el animal de la realidad de Picasso, el factor puede ser, a la vez, el factor de la realidad, y a la vez, el factor de la realidad de la realidad de la realidad.

In its circle of hell icy cold rules, and this refers back to the pathology of the humours, the cold, dry constitution of the earth. Albertinus expressly includes acedia in the melancholy syndrome: 'acedia or sloth is comparable in kind to the bite of a mad dog, for whoever is bitten by the same is immediately assailed by horrible dreams, he is terrified in his sleep, becomes enraged and senseless, rejects all drink, is afraid of water, barks like a dog, and becomes so fearful that he falls down in terror. Such men die very soon if they receive no help.'⁴⁶ The indecisiveness of the prince, in particular, is nothing other than saturnine acedia. Saturn causes people to be 'apathetic, indecisive, slow'.⁴⁷ The fall of the tyrant is caused by indolence of the heart. Just as this characterizes the figure of the tyrant so does unfaithfulness – another feature of saturnine man – characterize the figure of the courtier. It is not possible to conceive of anything more inconstant than the mind of the courtier, as depicted in the Trauerspiel: treachery is his element. It is not a sign of superficiality or clumsy characterization on the part of the authors that, at critical moments, the parasites abandon the ruler, without any pause for reflection, and go over to the other side. It is rather that their action reveals an unscrupulousness, which is in part a consciously Machiavellian gesture, but is also a dismal and melancholy submission to a supposedly unfathomable order of baleful constellations, which assumes an almost material character. Crown, royal purple, sceptre are indeed ultimately properties, in the sense of the drama of fate, and they are endowed with a fate, to which the courtier, as the augur of this fate, is the first to submit. His unfaithfulness to man is matched by a loyalty to these things to the point of being absorbed in contemplative devotion to them. Only in this hopeless loyalty to the creaturely, and to the law of its life, does the concept behind this behaviour attain its adequate fulfilment. In other words, all essential decisions in relation to men can offend against loyalty; they are subject to higher laws. Loyalty is completely appropriate only to the relationship of man to the world of things. The latter knows no higher law, and loyalty knows no object to which it might belong more exclusively than the world of things. And indeed this world is constantly calling upon it; and every loyal vow or memory surrounds itself with the fragments of the world of things as its very own, not-too-demanding objects. Clumsily, indeed unjustifiably, loyalty expresses, in its own way, a truth for the sake of which it does, of course, betray the world. Melancholy betrays the world for the sake of knowledge. But in its tenacious self-absorption it embraces dead objects in its contemplation, in order to redeem them. The poet, of whom the following has been said, speaks from the spirit of melancholy. 'Péguy used to speak of that irredeemability of things, that recalcitrance, that heaviness of things, indeed of beings, which in the end allows a little ash to survive from the efforts of heroes and saints.'⁴⁸ The persistence which is expressed in the intention of mourning, is born of its loyalty to the world of things. This is how we should understand that unfaithfulness which almanacs attribute to saturnine man, and this is how we should interpret that completely isolated dialectic contrast, the 'faithfulness in love' which Abû Ma sar ascribes to saturnine man.⁴⁹ Faithfulness is the rhythm of the emanatively descending levels of intention which reflect the appropriately transformed
